Jeep Wrangler Unlimited 2017

The Jeep Wrangler Unlimited is mostly unchanged for the 2017 model year, with the exception of standard LED headlights and fog lights on the Sahara and Rubicon trims, and optional on the Sport trim.

Jeep Wrangler Unlimited Overview

The Jeep Wrangler Unlimited is a four-door, compact SUV aimed at people who need decent interior space and a ruggedly capable off-road vehicle. Jeep began producing the Wrangler Unlimited with the 2004 model year. The current second generation of the Unlimited launched with the 2007 model year.

Competing vehicles include the Toyota FJ Cruiser, Nissan Xterra, Mitsubishi Outlander and Ford Escape.

Styles and Pricing: Jeep makes the Wrangler Unlimited in three different trim levels: Sport, Sahara and Rubicon. Sport models come with air conditioning, removable soft top, manual door locks, manual windows, manual side mirrors, front and rear tow hooks, 16-inch steel wheels, foglights, cruise control, tilt-only steering wheel, driver's seat height adjustment, 60/40 split fold rear seat and a sound system with six speakers, CD player, auxiliary audio input jack and steering wheel controls. An optional Power Convenience Group package adds power door locks, power windows, heated power side mirrors, keyless entry and an auto dimming rearview mirror. Stand-alone options include satellite radio, leather wrapped steering wheel and 17-inch alloy wheels.

Sahara models come with all of the standard and optional equipment on the Sport, as well as 18-inch alloy wheels, under-hood insulation, upgraded suspension, automatic headlights, side steps, body color fender flares and an Alpine sound system with six speakers. Rugged Rubicon models come with all of the standard equipment found on the Sport plus the Power Convenience Group. Additional standard equipment includes 17-inch wheels, 32-inch tires, disconnecting front sway bar, heavy-duty axles and transfer case, electronic front and rear locking differentials, air conditioning, rock rails, satellite radio and a leather wrapped steering wheel.

There is also a special edition Rubicon 10th Anniversary Edition that features upgrades like a half-inch higher ride height, Mopar rock rails, steel front and rear bumpers, off-road tires, tail light guards and red leather upholstery.

A Connectivity Group options package can be had on any of the trim levels. It includes Bluetooth connectivity, upgraded trip computer, USB/iPod plug and a tire pressure monitoring system.

All trim levels can be had with a multi-piece, removable hardtop that can be either black plastic or body-colored. Sport and Rubicon models can be outfitted with half doors equipped with plastic windows. Sahara and Rubicon models can be had with leather upholstery, heated front seats, navigation, digital music storage drive and automatic climate control.

A Wrangler Unlimited comes with a factory invoice of about $26,000 for a Sport model and an MSRP of about $27,000. The Sahara trim level adds about $6,000 to the vehicle's MSRP while the Rubicon trim level adds another $3,000. Your status as a member means you can count on receiving an upfront price and guaranteed savings, all while enjoying a no-hassle car buying experience with your Certified Dealer.

Powertrain: Every Jeep Wrangler Unlimited is powered by the same 3.6-liter V6 engine. Maximum output is 285 horsepower and 260 pound-feet of torque. All models come with four-wheel-drive, which is outfitted with high and low-range transfer case gears. A six-speed manual transmission with hill start assist comes as standard equipment, but for those who desire there is a five-speed automatic. The EPA estimates fuel mileage on the Wrangler Unlimited at 16 mpg in the city, 20 mpg on the highway and 18 mpg in combined driving.

Interior Style and Features: The interior of the Jeep Wrangler Unlimited is simplistic by today's standards, especially the all-gray interior trim pieces. Buyers can choose colors other than gray for the seats, such as black, tan or red. But the overall layout and design of the vehicle's interior is surprisingly simple. One of the few frills of the Wrangler Unlimited's interior is the metallic accent pieces on the dash and elsewhere. All of the surfaces on the inside of the vehicle are hard to the touch, with the exception of the seats, making them easy to wipe clean after splashing through mud or driving down dusty trails for hours on end.

Jeep designed the vehicle's gauge cluster to be simple and easy to use, which the four analog gauges deliver on both counts. The controls in the center stack are also simple and few, making it easy to make adjustments to things like the air temperature while driving either on or off the road. Unfortunately, the touchscreen's interface is not as simple to use, with frustrating on-screen buttons that can be difficult to select and menu navigation that can be quite confusing the first several times or so that you use it.

Fortunately, the Wrangler Unlimited with its extended wheelbase and two additional doors offers plenty of space in the front and rear for occupants. There is seating for up to five people, and legroom in both the front and rear is enough to accommodate adults. With the backseat folded down, cargo capacity is 86 cubic feet.

Overall Assessment:

If you are in need of a serious off-road machine that can transport five people plus gear through rugged terrain, the Jeep Wrangler Unlimited is an excellent choice. Even if you use the SUV as a daily driver, it behaves quite well on the road, although not as sure-footed as some recent crossover SUVs. Still, for rugged durability it's hard to beat the Wrangler Unlimited.

Excellent alternative vehicles include the Nissan Xterra and the Toyota FJ Cruiser.
